

NEW YORK, SUNDAY, MARCH 30, 1913.—Copyright, 1913, by the Sun Printing and Publishing Association.

PICTORIAL STORY OF THE GREAT DISASTER

On the outskirts of Cincinnati, looking over the Ohio River to Kentucky. The flood is expected to be the worst in the city's history. Hundreds of families have been driven out of their homes. Warehouses on the river front are flooded. Covington and other towns on the Kentucky shore are more or less under water.

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood, N. Y.

Columbus suffered from fire as well as flood. The property loss, like the loss of life, cannot be told until the waters recede. It will be very heavy.

Copyright by International News Service.

Thrilling escape from flood and flames at Dayton. G. W. Timmerman, caught by the rising waters in a house threatened by fire, climbed along telephone wires to safety.

This picture gives a vivid idea of the extent of the flood at Dayton. While the loss of life is less than was at first estimated, the damage to property may exceed $50,000,000.